prisoner noun: a person held in custody or captivity, especially while awaiting trial or serving a prison sentence; someone who is deprived of freedom of action or expressionHe was sentenced to serve time in prison, sentenced to be held against his will as a criminal, for prisioneiro in a building designed to keep him there, but he remained firm, never giving in. Many were taken prisoner during the war, many soldiers were killed and the rest took prisoner, but he refused to give up, fighting back with every breath. The dean of faculty, farmichael, advised his client, alexander crocket, to call witnesses to show how the prisoner was guilty, but the man remained steadfast, never once breaking down under the pressure. Despite all this, he continued to speak out against his imprisonment, using his words to inspire others and bring hope to those who had lost it. The man was at the end of his financial means, and also secretly involved with a woman named Mrs. Philips. A finger gesture from Lippet indicated that the prisoner was unaware of this fact. According to routine, the prisoner did not have access to light. "Prisoner?" exclaimed the little man, jumping up from his seat. Lippet got up from his chair and whispered in the ear of the prisoner. When Natty agreed with him, he removed the deer skin covering from his head. The prisoner was seated next to a gentleman wearing a wig, who was discussing papers with another gentleman wearing a wig whose hands were in his pockets. The prisoner's lawyer had been looking over some documents when suddenly there was an outburst of shouting and gunfire. A man rushed into view, shouting as he charged towards the man wielding a sword. It was March 1st, and the prisoner soon found himself surrounded by darkness. No one could have imagined releasing a prisoner in such an unconventional manner. Olivain had prepared the horses for the young men, while the guards from Count de Guiche ensured that the Spanish prisoner remained secure on his pony.
