You may have noticed that Impactful ninja is all about providing helpful information to make a positive impact on the world and society. And that we love to link back to where we found all the information for each of our posts. Most of these links are informational-based for you to check out their primary sources with one click. But some of these links are so-called "affiliate links" to product that we recommend. Why do we add these product links? First and foremost, because we believe that they add value to you. For example, when we wrote a post about the environmental impact of long showers, we came across an EPA recommendation to use WaterSense showerheads. So we linked to where you can find them. Or, for many of our posts, we also link to our favorite books on that topic so that you can get a much more holistic overview than one single blog post could provide. And when there is an affiliate program for these products, we sign up for it. For example, as Amazon Associates, we earn from qualifying purchases. What do these affiliate links mean for you? First, and most importantly, we still only recommend products that we believe add value for you. When you buy something through one of our affiliate links, we may earn a small commission - but at no additional costs to you. And when you buy something through a link that is not an affiliate link, we won't receive any commission but we'll still be happy to have helped you. What do these affiliate links mean for us? When we find products that we believe add value to you and the seller has an affiliate program, we sign up for it. When you buy something through one of our affiliate links, we may earn a small commission (at no extra costs to you). And at this point in time, all money is reinvested in sharing the most helpful content with you. This includes all operating costs for running this site and the content creation itself. What does this mean for me personally? You may have noticed by the way Impactful Ninja is operated that money is not the driving factor behind it. It is a passion project of mine and I love to share helpful information with you to make a positive impact on the world and society. However, it's a project in that I invest a lot of time and also quite some money. Eventually, my dream is to one day turn this passion project into my full-time job and provide even more helpful information. But that's still a long time to go.  "embrace" it, it means we work hard and accept that it's something that we need to do. This trait usually shows future employers that we'll accept whatever team projects might come our way. It shows that we almost "thrive" on the energy they give us and that we work really well in team situations. Here are a few examples of how it looks: I embrac teamwork whenever I'm presented with it.I'm happy to embrace teamwork, as you'll see from my record and all the things I did in my previous company. I embrace teamwork well when we want to show that we like to work with others. "Working closely" is a great way to show that we get stuck in with the team environment and that we're more than willing to offer our support whenever the team needs it. It typically also shows that we're able to take a backseat in the team and let other people shine. Some of the best team projects are those completed by everyone involved rather than just one leader taking charge, after all. Check out a few of these examples to see how it works: I enjoy working closely with others, and I'll be happy to share my recent team projects with you. I enjoy working closely with others and find it's where I have the most fun at work. I enjoy working closely with others rather than working on my own most of the time. "Team-oriented personality" is another great way to show that we love being a part of one and that we work better in these environments. Some of these examples will help you to understand it: I have a team-oriented personality, which is why I climbed the ranks so quickly. I have a team-oriented personality, and I love to be part of collective projects whenever they're presented to me. My team-oriented personality makes me the ideal candidate for this position. "Dedicated team member" shows that we are dedicated to the role we apply for. If we are dedicated, it means we work hard, and we work to make sure that we'll always be a sufficient and successful members of the team. There are many ways we can use this phrase, as you'll see in the following examples: I'm a dedicated team member at my current place of employment. You won't find anyone who can take charge and allow others to dictate the flow like I can. "Always part of a team" works well when we want to show that our previous jobs were very team-dominant. If we always complete projects in a team format, it can work well to show our future employers that we know how to handle ourselves in these cases. However, you do need to be careful with this one. If you're "always" on a team, it means you aren't often able to work independently. You need to be able to prove this fact with some other information as things I've learned from there with the new team. "Able to work well in a team" is a simple way to show that we can be good on a team. It works well to replace "team player" because it's a longer phrase that directly attributes qualities and skills. We often want to prove this point with hands-on examples. Some of these examples should make it more clear how it works: I'm able to work well in a team, which I will show you based on the previous places I've worked.I'm able to work well in a team, which I believe sets me apart from most of the candidates you might have seen before me. This phrase works well when we want to show that we're team players but also capable of being independent. Since not all projects will require teamwork, it can be good to highlight that we are happy to work alone or with a group (depending on the task). Some of these examples will help you make more sense of it: I work well both individually and as part of a group. You do not have to worry about any projects that I'm in charge of! work well both individually and as part of a group. You'll find that I'm excellent at leading the group or taking a back foot if
