

The gods bless Percy and his friends with divine food - nectar and ambrosia. But not all is as it seems. Annabeth brings a magic Yankees cap that makes her invisible. Luke gifts them with winged sneakers for Grover instead of Percy. Chiron presents Percy with Anaklusmos, or Riptide, the pen sword from Poseidon; its power lies in harming monsters but leaving mortals untouched. Percy's mortal stench was overwhelming, hiding his demigod scent from monsters. The trio boards the bus with three old ladies, one of whom is Mrs. Dodds. The Furies board as well; Percy uses Annabeth's invisibility to sneak up and slice them apart. After a chaotic escape, they reach Aunty Em's Garden Gnome Emporium, where they meet Medusa - Aunty Em in disguise. A fierce battle ensues, but Percy ultimately slays her with Riptide. As the dust settles, Grover shares his dream of becoming a searcher for Pan, seeking to prove himself as the first satyr to succeed. The trio meets a lost pink poodle on the train and receives $200 as reward. Two days pass, during which they learn Percy is now wanted by mortals for a bus incident. Annabeth reveals her troubled past with her mortal father, who never accepted her. Despite their constant fighting, they agree to cooperate like Athena and Poseidon did when forming the chariot. In St. Louis, they journey on, they meet the Mother of Monsters, Echidna, disguised as a lady with a forked-tongued chihuahua. Analysis shows Percy's quest as a struggle to balance two worlds - mortal and divine. Demigods like him face challenges from both sides, including school and monsters. The bus battle sets the stage for series of tests, echoing epic Greek hero stories where physical strength and wit are put to the test. In this narrative, Percy's journey is just beginning as he navigates his inbetween status. test, Percy rises to the occasion. Later on, though, it becomes clear that he cannot surmount every obstacle on his own. He needs his friends' help to recognize Medusa for who she is and save them, even though he is the one who ultimately defeats her. Grover and Annabeth are considered Percy's "sidekicks," but really, they have stories and aims of their own that keep them motivated throughout their quest. Annabeth details the story of her life spent feeling unwanted by her mortal father, and this quest is a chance for her to prove herself. Grover has to prove himself, too, in order to get the searcher's license and embark on what he believes to be his true purpose in life: a quest to find the god Pan. It is impowant to remember that these two are complex characters who are on this quest not solely to help Percy, but also to achieve their own goals. As the journey goes on, the book includs more and more allusions to Greek mythological stories. Readers are not expected to know all of them before reading, and one of the key features of this series is that the books aim to teach young readers these important stories in an engaging, relatable way. Because Percy needs to learn a lot of them, too, readers can learn about them through Annabeth also mentions the story of Athena and Poseidon cooperating to build a chariot, a combination of both of their skills. Chapter 13 ends on a cliffhanger, with Percy jumping into the river from the Gateway Arch after being attacked by the chimera. This is an important moment, because it represents the first time Percy has openly trusted his father to come to his aid in a time of trouble. Only a few days before, Percy had said to Grover that his only motivation on this trip is to go to the underworld and bring back his mother, but Grover saw through that ruse and knew Percy was, in part, doing it out of pride in his father. This incident proves that this is true: Percy places an immense amount of faith in his father by jumping off the arch, showing that he really does value the god's role in his life. Percy may bring two companions on the quest. He chooses Grover, and Annabeth have a cap of invisibility from Athena. Chiron give Percy Riptide, the sword-pen he killed Mrs. Dodds with, and Luke offer Percy a pair of winged sneakers that was a gift from Hermes. Chiron warn Percy against using the shoes. The air is Zeus's domain, and for Percy to fly "would not be wise for you" (152). Percy give the shoes to Grover. Camp security take Grover, Percy, and Annabeth to New York City so they can catch bus. After Percy and his friends get on the bus, Mrs. Dodds and two identical woman (the three Furies) board. Like Medusa and other monsters. But atleast now we get to see notable mythological creatures in action. However the problum with Greek myths is that they dont always have one or the same story, ex: the story of Zeus's birth and Medusa's story can vary alot. Thats why authors can use them in diffrent ways and make ther books more original. Copyrights The Lightning Thief from BookRags, Inc. All rights reserved. The Lightning Thief from BookRags, Inc. He's better at noticing when someone is trying to trick him, unlike Grover who didn't notice anything at first. Percy's ability to recognize the threat was a major warning sign, which makes it seem like he was in a trance or under some kind of spell. This doesn't make sense because monsters can do that and Medusa can't do it either. However, if your satyr friend is telling you there are monsters around, then listen to him. In this case, Percy didn't listen to Grover and ended up eating with Aunty Em who seemed suspicious. I would have been more skeptical about everything, especially when we saw statues of humans outside of museums. Medusa's behavior also raised some red flags since she knew everyone's name without being introduced. Although, monsters usually call Percy only had his sword. In the end, they came out alive but bickering, so Percy decided to leave his bow in the car, which made him look suspicious to mortals since he's already a wanted person. Percy found something useful when searching Aunty Em's shop for postage: the address of the Underworld. It was also discovered that this place is a record company and I don't get why it would be there in LA. Maybe it's because they are on opposite sides of the country from Olympus. This whole situation has started Percy's journey with the gods and I guess he's lucky to have survived so far compared to other half-bloods who aren't as fortunate. Aunt Em's family circle dwindled, but their bond persisted. Annabeth senses that it's time to part ways NOW. Grover concedes, yet Percy remains uncertain. Aunt Em proposes a photo shoot, catching Percy off guard. Though hesitant, Percy doesn't see the harm, while Annabeth and Grover realize Aunt Em is Medusa, her hair coiled with deadly serpents. A timely warning from friends saves Percy from Medusa's gaze. Medusa recounts her curse by Athena, triggered by Poseidon's trespass in her sanctum. Her visage is unflattering, and snakes adorn her locks. Percy beheads Medusa using a glass orb, severed head to Mount Olympus via postal service, accompanied by kind wishes. Hades' address is discovered in Los Angeles - Medusa's underworld clientele includes him.
